Collaborative & Fun!

It all began in 1997 when speech-language pathologist Jacquie Clark discovered that there was nothing that taught current events for those with autism and other special needs, which led her to create News-2-You®, a weekly newspaper cultivating literacy with current and relevant news. As the way students learn evolved, so did n2y – transforming from print to digital to help individuals with special needs experience meaningful access to the world around them.

n2y launched Unique Learning System®, an online standards-based program that provides students with meaningful access to the general education curriculum through powerful adaptations in the presentation of curriculum. Soon after, SymbolStix PRIME® launched, making available an online search engine and materials creation platform with the most complete and current symbol set available anywhere.
